

Cracking the Crime of the Century!

Here's Key Evidence In Lindy Case

Spread out on the table for examination and checking by police and federal officials is $13,750 in bills, identified as part of the $50,000 thrown over a cemetery wall in the Bronx by Dr. John F. Condon in the vain attempt to ransom Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's kidnaped son in 1932. The police captain is shown with the square tin can in which the money had been buried in the dirt floor of the garage where Bernard Richard Hauptmann, arrested as the kidnaping suspect, kept his car.

Center Of Search For Kidnap Clues

This modest home, in thinly populated area of Bronx borough, New York city, was the center of feverish police activities before Bernard Richard Hauptmann was arrested in connection with the kidnaping and murder of the infant son of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh two and a half years ago. The little building at right around which the throng of people is gathered is Hauptmann's garage, in which $13,750 of the Lindbergh ransom money was found.

"Jafsie" Jubilant Over Coup

Dr. John F. Condon, the Lindbergh intermediary known as "Jafsie," was jubilant when, as pictured at left, he discussed with a detective the prospect of clearing up the sensational case. He delivered the ransom to the supposed kidnapers, and since has viewed hundreds of suspects in an effort to identify them.

Four Whose Work Aided Capture Of Hauptmann

COL. NORMAN SCHWARTZKOPF

FRANK X. FAY

J. EDGAR HOOVER

DR. JOHN F. CONDON

These are four of the men who have been actively following the elusive clues in the two and one-half year old Lindbergh kidnaping case. Schwartzkopf, as head of the New Jersey state police, took charge of the investigation at the Lindbergh home near Hopewell, N. J.; Dr. Condon, under the code name "Jafsie" acted as intermediary for the delivery of $50,000 ransom money; Fay is head of federal secret service agents in New York; Hoover has directed U. S. department of justice agents in the chase. All were hopeful that the arrest of Bernard Richard Hauptmann in New York city would provide the long sought solution of the mystery.

Couple Held As Suspects

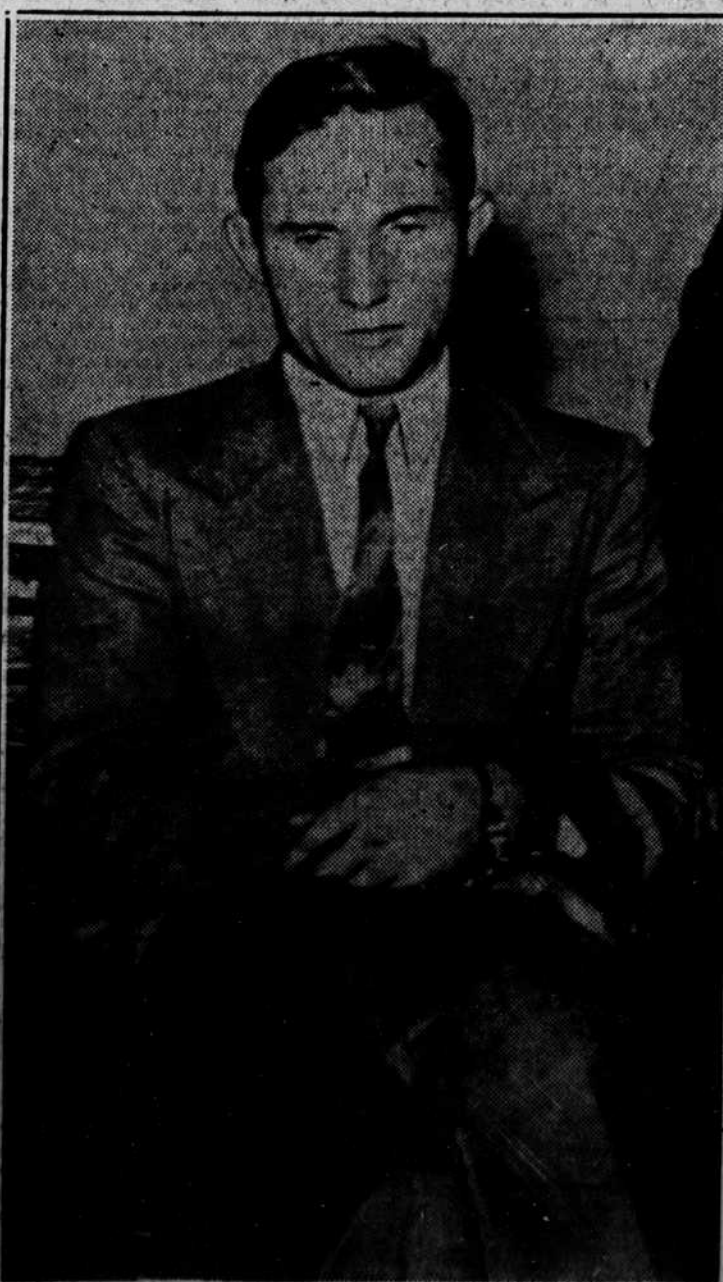

Held with Bernard Richard Hauptmann for questioning in connection with the finding of Lindbergh ransom money in his garage is his wife, who is shown beside him above in a snapshot made while they were on a seaside outing. The couple are the parents of a young son, Bruno.

As Law Closed Net On Kidnaping Suspects

One of the longest and most widespread manhunt in history was concentrated on sensational developments in the Lindbergh kidnaping case as this picture was taken in a New York city police station. Seated (left to right) are J. Edgar Hoover, head of the United States department of justice, investigation division; Commissioner John F. O'Ryan of the New York police department; Col. H. Norman Schwartzkopf, head of the New Jersey state police. With them are other state, federal and city operatives conferring on the case.

Had Lindbergh Ransome Money

Where "Jafsie" Paid For Baby's Return

The $50,000 in ransom currency, which later was to point to solution of the Lindbergh baby kidnaping, was delivered to the abductors in March, 1932, at the spot pictured above. While Col. Charles Lindbergh waited nearby, Dr. John F. Condon, an intermediary, tossed the money over the hedge of St. Raymond's cemetery in the Bronx, N. Y., to a man whom police believe was R. R. Hauptman, now under arrest.
